important. After my outburst of 'that's a load of *&#! I explained the importance of attic ventilation.

I spend a lot of time reading and studying about residential building systems as a home inspector, handywoman and teacher to other homeowners. It is important to understand that there must be a balance between attic ventilation and the other systems in the house. It is not necessarily a more is better situation. The key is adequate ventilation.

The following information contains facts about the importance of ventilating your attic space as related to energy efficiency, indoor air quality and structural integrity.

Ventilation and cooling efficiencies.

Cooling your home is one of the more difficult systems in your home to control. The cost of cooling your home can differ significantly from your neighbor's home simply by virtue of a few simple things. One of the most important is your roof and attic space. In the book, Residential Energy (cost savings and comfort for existing buildings), it is noted "Homes with reflective roof coatings, at least R-19 insulation and good attic ventilation, may experience two-thirds less solar heat gain than those homes with darker roofs, little insulation and poor ventilation." The less solar heat gain the less cooling costs incurred. read more
